Rosenstein, who interviewed and wrote extensively about Peter Drucker for USA Today and other publications, will share Drucker's secrets for leading a profoundly fulfilling life . He was an embedded librarian in the News Section of USA TODAY for 21 years.

Drucker had a devoted following in the library and information worlds for many years. He coined the term "knowledge workers" in the late 1950s, and was a keynote speaker at the 2002 SLA Annual Conference in Los Angeles. In a career of more than 70 years, he published more than 40 books and was a master teacher and trusted consultant before his death at 95 in 2005.
